Nashville Debate League
Since 2010, the Nashville Debate League ("NDL") has held monthly debate tournaments for MNPS students to compete in research-based policy debate. Studies have shown that competitive urban debate can help low-income students of color close the achievement gap in urban public schools. NDL students quickly acquire the skills to take charge of their learning, dive deeply into complex issues, become critical thinkers and problem-solvers, and find their voices in a safe, supportive environment. The Nashville Debate League is a member of the National Association for Urban Debate Leagues.

National Association for Urban Debate Leagues
The National Association for Urban Debate Leagues closes the achievement gap in urban public schools by giving urban students the opportunity to compete in academic debate. Its urban debate programs serve 8,400 students in 19 cities across the United States. Seventy-six percent of urban debaters are from low-income families and 86% are students of color. Urban debaters are 89% more likely than non-debaters to attend a four-year college or university.
